

Hector Arse

Hector is a very curious person, always grateful for the effort made by his parents so that he could be the first generation with university studies in his family. He believes in education as a tool to open minds and in traveling as a tool to form minds to embrace diversity. An open mind and tolerance is what he tries to instill in his three children. Hector moved with his wife, Rebeca, three years ago to Albuquerque. In addition, he has also lived in Denver, Ottawa Canada, London and Oxford England.

He holds a Master's degree in Business Administration and Management from Universidad de Navarra in Spain and a Master's degree in Environmental Studies and Land Zoning from Universidad de Deusto, Spain.

Hector is a merger of management and entrepreneurship. He has a mind that constantly thinks about new ways of doing things. He has more than 20 years managing innovation and economic development projects, in addition to helping entrepreneurs and startups validate their business models and scale them. His experience has given him the opportunity to share his way of doing things in business schools and conferences.
